The Australian Institute of Traffic Planning and Management has organised a half day seminar on the Sunshine Coast highlighting the infrastructure challenges facing the region. The topics cover challenges faced by State and local government including the public transport.

The seminar has brought together speakers from key government agencies such as Ken Duetscher and Terry Upton from Department of Transport Main Roads, Nic Cooney from the Sunshine Coast Regional Council and Mark Bachels from Parsons Brinkerhoff.

The speakers from these government organisations will be presenting and highlighting planning studies, projects in the design stage and projects under construction. The speakers will also be outlining future directions in investment and key policy priorities that will influence the way investment is made in this sector.
