Universal Access: the practical side of providing for people with disabilities

Following the successful workshop on this topic in Sydney earlier this year, the NSW Branch of AITPM, in partnership with the RTA, will present it again in Sydney on 3rd December – the International Day for People with Disability. The workshop will provide participants with an insight into the design implications of ensuring access for people with disabilities, and a summary of current Australian practice. Practical hands-on experiential exercises will be used to demonstrate the sort of barriers faced by people with disabilities when accessing road infrastructure.

Speaker: Mr Ben Sgherza

Ben has been legally blind since a motor vehicle accident at the age of two. He has developed personal skills and techniques which assist in overcoming barriers to equitable access to and participation in all aspects of community life. With over 10 years experience as an independent consultant, he has developed and delivered hundreds of disability presentations. He has a reputation for delivering informative, engaging and practical workshops in an entertaining format, using a very amicable and inclusive presentation style. He led a most successful similar workshop at the AITPM National Conference 2008.
