STREET DESIGN – TRENDS AND EMERGING PRACTICE

For professionals designing streets, how we approach the task has fundamentally changed over the last decade: ‘streets for people’, ‘integrated street design’ transit-oriented development’, ‘mixed use streets’ ‘streets by design’ – are some of the new directions, approaches and buzz words. This presentation will draw on emerging international practice, lessons learnt, European and Australian examples, and will cross-relate contributions and approaches to street design from the disciplines of traffic/transportation engineering, planning and urban design.

Natalya Boujenko is a founder of Intermethod, consultancy specialising in integrated street design and performance management. Natalya is a joint author of: ‘Link and Place: A Guide to Street Planning and Design’ (Jones, Boujenko and Marshall, 2007, Local Transport Today, London) with extensive international project experience.

AITPM look forward to seeing you at the forum
